

Assignment Submission

Your final submission should contain:

1. A title page with your name, the essay question, the date, your assignment teacher and the word count for your essay (excluding the list of references).
2. From Week One: Your essay question and a brief explanation (up to 150 words) about why you chose this essay question (note: if you have changed or modified your essay question, you should add your final essay question and a brief explanation of why you changed it)
3. From Week Two: An annotated bibliography for three texts
4. From Week Three: A detailed essay plan
5. Your final essay including a list of references (you do not need to submit your essay draft as part of your final submission)

Including the submissions from Weeks One to Three will help the person marking your work to see how your ideas have developed over the course so it is worth spending time to ensure that you have presented the work to your satisfaction.

Academic Writing Check List

Your essay needs the following:

A: An introduction which states:

- the topic of your essay
- your essay question and why it is interesting, relevant or important
- your thesis i.e. your answer to the essay question

B: A main body which:

- is clearly and logically structured
- may be divided into different sections
- may have sub-titles
- is divided into paragraphs which:
 - have a unified theme
 - have a clear topic sentence
 - are logically structured
 - link sentences and ideas with cohesive language
 - create a narrative (i.e. build on each other to make a clear argument)
 - are relevant to the essay question

C: A conclusion which:

- restates what has been argued and how you supported that argument
- indicates why the discussion of the topic is relevant and what implications it has

Areas to consider:

D: Argument:

- have you clearly answered the question and indicated what your position is?
- have you supported your arguments with evidence (e.g. statistics, data, research, theory...)?
- have you used examples and cases to illustrate your arguments where appropriate?
- have you considered counter arguments and/or limitations to your argument?
- does each paragraph add something new and relevant to your essay, either development or progression of argument, or evidence etc?
- have you shown sufficient criticality towards the literature you have cited?
- have you used the literature to support your answer to the essay question, and not just summarised what you have read?
- have you managed to synthesize sources?
- on the whole, have you been argumentative, analytical and/or evaluative rather than descriptive?

E: Referencing

- have you included all the literature you cite in a list of references?
- have you cited a minimum of six references?
- have you used a consistent referencing style?
- do you cite all paraphrases or quotations accurately?
- have you checked your Turnitin report: do you need to make any changes as a result?
