

Paper C: Interview - Assessment Criteria

	SPEAKING Fluency & Clarity, Accuracy, Structure, Impact	LISTENING Comprehension, Interaction
80 or above	The speaker is highly articulate and fluent, and speech is easily understandable. There are virtually no errors in pronunciation, or the use of grammar and vocabulary and the speaker uses an excellent range of sophisticated grammar and vocabulary. Ideas are structured in a very clear and coherent manner using an excellent range of cohesive devices. The speaker's contribution is always relevant and focused, and the ideas expressed are complex and developed in detail and depth. It is expected that the speaker would be able to make an excellent contribution to a group discussion at LSE.	The speaker clearly understands all questions whether from the teacher or other students, seeking clarification if necessary. This is demonstrated by highly effective responses to questions. The speaker encourages and responds effectively to the contributions of others; he/she is able to highlight points of agreement and also of disagreement within the group in a constructive way, turn-take with ease, and ask for clarification where appropriate.
70 - 75	The speaker is generally articulate and fluent and most speech is easily understandable. There are few errors in pronunciation or the use of grammar and vocabulary; any errors are minor and do not impede communication and the speaker uses a good/very good range of sophisticated grammar and vocabulary. Ideas are structured in a clear and coherent manner using a good range of cohesive devices. The speaker's contribution is generally relevant and focused, and the ideas expressed are mostly complex and developed in detail and depth. It is expected that the speaker would be able to make a positive contribution to a group discussion at LSE.	The speaker understands most/all questions, whether from the teacher or other students, seeking clarification if necessary. This is demonstrated by effective responses to questions. The speaker responds well to contributions from others, is able to express agreement and disagreement effectively, turn-take appropriately and ask for clarification when necessary.

	SPEAKING Fluency & Clarity, Accuracy, Structure, Impact	LISTENING
60 - 65	The speaker is reasonably fluent although he/she may be hesitant at times and some speech may be unclear. There are several errors in pronunciation or the use of grammar and vocabulary, but most errors are minor and do not impede communication and the speaker uses an adequate range of sophisticated grammar and vocabulary. Ideas are mostly structured in a clear and coherent manner but are not always clearly organized; a limited range of cohesive devices is used. The speaker's contribution is not always, relevant, and focused; the ideas expressed are not always developed in sufficient detail and depth. It is expected that the speaker would be able to make a reasonable contribution to a group discussion at LSE.	The speaker understands most questions, whether from the teacher or other students, although may not seek clarification when necessary. This is demonstrated by generally effective responses to questions. On the whole, the speaker responds effectively to contributions from others, is able to express agreement and disagreement, turn-taking and ask for clarification when necessary.
55 or below	The speaker is rather hesitant and communication breakdowns occur. There are multiple errors in pronunciation or the use of grammar and vocabulary; these have a negative impact on communication and the speaker uses an inadequate range of sophisticated grammar and vocabulary. Ideas are not generally structured in a clear and coherent manner; a limited range of cohesive devices is used. The speaker's contribution is not always relevant and/or focused, and the ideas expressed are not complex and/or developed in detail and depth. It is expected that the speaker would not be able to make a positive contribution to a group discussion at LSE.	The speaker may misunderstand some questions, whether from the teacher or other students, and does not seek clarification when necessary. This is demonstrated by responses to questions that are not always effective. The speaker is able to express agreement and disagreement, but there may be some difficulties with getting or holding a turn; also, the speaker may dominate the discussion without involving others.